

Mysterious Photographs Discovered!

30th March 2020

This week, a holiday maker has discovered a long lost, underwater camera while visiting Watergate Bay and he wants to find its owner.

He boy was on the beach with his family when he found the camera floating in the sea.

Johnny Redgrave, a 12 year old school boy from London, has been visiting Watergate Bay ever year since he was a small baby. He was searching for crabs when a huge wave knocked him into the water. "I love coming to the beach," he told us, " but I never expected to find anything like this. It really made my day."

After finding the relic, Johnny and his family got the film developed with astounding results. The photographs showed some very strange goings on under the sea.

A photograph Johnny Redgrave claims to have come from the camera.

Here at the South Shropshire Journal, we have sent the photograph for analysis. Could it be a hoax like the Cottingley Fairies which took years to uncover?

By Line - By Fred Tucker

Elsie Wright and Frances Griffiths' image of the fairies they later admitted were not real.

Johnny Redgrave has given us full access to the photographs and stranger still has asked us to find the owner.

Some of the photographs appear to show various children who have found the camera. Each one has taken a photograph of themselves and all the previous children who had found it. When analysed closely, the photograph reveals a young man from the Edwardian times. It is this person or persons family that Johnny would like to trace.

The original owner.

If anyone has any information regarding the identity of the man in the photograph, please email the news desk at southshropshirejournalnewsdesk@outlook.com